so we go to another place to have a rest. Some people go to a seaside, others go to an exotic place to see something unusual.

Now most of people choose the first variant. They flight straight to their holiday resort and almost never leave it.

But tourists in the 1960s and 70s went to somewhere to get new experience of other culture. It was popular when American people went to Europe or Asia and Europeans and Asians went to America. So-called "cultural changing".

I think this situation can be explained by invention of planes. It became available for people only in 1960s. So they use this chance and went to discover something new for themselves.

In the present people are tired of everything. So they go to a beach and just relax.

But there are some people who prefer cultural tourism. So in general, I don't understand such people who just lie on a beach and do nothing. As for me, I'm a fan of Asia. So periodically I go there and just walk through the streets and communicate with local people. I think it is very interesting and useful to know different cultures. You can become the best version of yourself this way.

In the end, I want to say that the time is repeating so I think in the nearest future people will choose the way of tourism like people lived in 1960's.
