Will Durant, the U.S. historian said that "Education is a progressive discovery of our own ignorance". I agree with his opinion because education is really important in modern society. But why people in ancient world could have everything without even an ability to read and now you have to get better everyday ~~to~~ in order to "get the place under the sun"!

First of all, as a very fast growth of technologies, people get more dumb everyday. Few of us will have a brilliant future without a good educational level. Also, ~~education~~ the better your level of education is, the more opportunities you have.

As the conclusion I want to say, that in my opinion education is ^{like} an open window to a good life. You just have to make an effort to open the curtains. That's why I agree that education is a progressive discovery of our own ignorance.
