I think, the terms of summer holidays should be longer, <sup>print</sup> because it's time, when children can spend their free time, as they want to st For instance, some teens want to spend it learning something new, some just want to get some rest, some want to start a new hobby.

To my mind, holidays are great for learning new languages, 'cause st when a person has many subjects to study during school term, <sup>log</sup> he has neither <sup>sb</sup> time nor wish to learn one more subject. So such terms without school help children by getting rid of a big volume of information, what helps with st getting more free time for learning something new.

By the way, for some children spending holidays without learning something new is great too. They would rather to sleep a bit longer st than their usual time, or just play computer games, it relieves stress, which they get during school term.

In my certain opinion, during the term of school children get much homework to do and tests, which they must be prepared for, so it takes much time, thus there is no time for any kind of hobbies. Therefore, holidays should be longer, so children ~~can~~ could do something they like. I think, it's st vital.
